Privacy Legislation

Privacy issues have been extremely active in recent years. In past Congresses, numerous privacy bills have been introduced. In the Senate, Senators Dianne Feinstein (D-CA) and Richard Shelby (R-AL) have long called for wide-ranging privacy legislation. In the House, former Energy and Commerce Committee Chairman Joe Barton (R-TX) has strong views on this issue. Rep. Cliff Stearns (R-FL), former Chairman of the Consumer Protection subcommittee, also has pushed online and offline privacy legislation in the past. In recent years, legislation has transitioned from general privacy issues to more specific issues such as data security, “spyware,” and behavioral advertising

The FTC is also becoming more active in this area. It recently urged action on behavioral advertising practices. ANA has met frequently with the FTC to urge self-regulation and enforcement of existing laws and regulations rather than the enactment of new laws. We have developed a self-regulatory program for online behavioral advertising, which promotes transparency, notice and choice for consumers. More information on the program can be viewed at <http://www.aboutads.info>.

| S. 799 | Commercial Privacy Bill of Rights Act of 2011 |
| Sponsor | Description |
| Kerry (D-MA) | This bill requires entities that collect personally identifiable information to establish a comprehensive privacy program to safeguard personal information . It requires the FTC to conduct rulemakings requiring companies to provide clear, concise and timely notice of information collection practices and to provide consumers with the ability to exercise choice as follows: opt-in for collection, use or transfer of “sensitive personally identifiable information” and opt-out of collection, use or transfer of all other data. It requires a robust, clear, and conspicuous mechanism for opt-out consent for the use of data by third parties in behavioral advertising. It further requires that companies provide consumers with access to all personally identifiable information about them and a mechanism to correct such information. It establishes the FTC as primary enforcer of new rules but state attorneys general could also enforce the law subject to FTC intervention, preempts state laws in this area and specifically provides no private right of action. It also establishes a “safe harbor” program to be administered by FTC that would establish a mechanism for implementation of the law’s requirements. |

Media Content and Child Protection Legislation

A number of high profile incidents over the past few years have increased Congressional attention on both indecency and violent entertainment. In 2006, Congress passed legislation to increase indecency fines ten-fold to $325,000 per violation. In addition, some members of Congress have sought to limit violent programming by giving the Federal Communications Commission regulatory authority to ban it if measures such as the ratings system and v-chip are found to be ineffective.

ANA opposes any restrictions on violent programming that limit the First Amendment rights of broadcasters. We have also been instrumental in the creation of the Alliance for Family Entertainment, a proactive group of 45 major national advertisers. (See the Alliance for Family Entertainment section on the ANA web site).

Direct-to-Consumer Prescription Drug Advertising Legislation

Numerous surveys have shown that direct-to-consumer prescription drug advertising imparts important benefits to consumers. However, some in Congress want to limit this category of advertising, either through moratoriums or limitations on the tax deductibility of the cost of advertising. ANA has lobbied key Congressional committees in support of DTC pharmaceutical advertising, provided key witnesses for hearings and distributed economic research in support of DTC advertising to key members of Congress.

ANA supports prescription drug advertising and opposes any attempts to limit it. In this effort, ANA works with our member companies and industry groups such as the Pharmaceutical Research and Manufacturers Association (PhRMA) to protect the right of pharmaceutical manufacturers to communicate directly and effectively with consumers. We support PhRMA's Guiding Principles for Direct-to-Consumer Advertising, which can be viewed at

Obesity and Food Advertising Legislation

Obesity was identified in 2001 by the Surgeon General as the second leading cause of preventable death in the United States. In response, there have been a number of initiatives proposed in Congress to increase physical activity and improve nutrition, especially among young people. ANA is in favor of such legislation. Unfortunately, this has also led to attacks on the food industry's advertising and marketing of their products. ANA has been increasingly active in resisting any limitations on truthful, non-deceptive food advertising. Additionally, the Children's Advertising Review Unit (CARU) has undertaken a revision of its guidelines regarding children's advertising, which can be viewed at <http://www.caru.org/guidelines/index.asp>. The National Advertising Review Council has set up a Children's Food and Beverage Advertising Initiative, which includes 17 of the largest food advertisers, to ensure that advertising includes information about healthy food choices and healthy lifestyles. More information on the initiative can be viewed at <http://www.cbbb.org/initiative/>.

Alcohol Beverage Advertising Legislation

ANA monitors Congressional, regulatory and judicial activities impacting alcohol beverages. We actively lobby in opposition to legislative or regulatory proposals that would infringe on the right to carry out truthful and nondeceptive advertising of legal products directed to legal audiences. The Ad Council (<http://www.adcouncil.org/>) and the Century Council (<http://www.centurycouncil.org/>) also have carried out extensive public service advertising in regard to anti-alcohol abuse campaigns.

Key Pending and Recently Decided Court Cases

The First Amendment protections for commercial speech are the ultimate safety net for all advertisers. As an ever-widening range of advertising becomes controversial, the courts become an even more crucial battleground for advertisers. ANA has played an active role in almost every major commercial speech case over the past twenty years, through “friend-of-the-court” briefs or by supporting parties in critical lawsuits.

These efforts have been successful. In a number of recent cases, the U.S. Supreme Court has ratcheted up the level of First Amendment protection for commercial speech. In its decision in Greater New Orleans Broadcasting Association v. United States, 527 U.S. 173 (1999), the Supreme Court cited ANA’s brief for its articulation of the position that truthful, non-misleading commercial speech should be protected by a strict scrutiny standard instead of the current Central Hudson test. While the Supreme Court has not yet gone that far, in Thompson v. Western States Medical Center, 535 U.S. 357 (2002), a commercial speech case, Justice Sandra Day O’Connor wrote that “if the First Amendment means anything, it means that regulating speech must be a last – not first – resort.” ANA continues its active efforts in the courts to protect the First Amendment rights of marketers to communicate with consumers.

Following is a summary of some important pending and recently decided advertising cases.

Currently Pending Cases

Discount Tobacco City & Lottery, Inc et al v. United States of America

In 2009, President Obama signed the Family Smoking Prevention and Tobacco Control Act into law, giving the Food and Drug Administration for the first time authority over tobacco products and their marketing and advertising. Soon after, a challenge against the advertising provisions contained in the law was initiated by six major tobacco companies in the U.S. District Court for the Western District of Kentucky (as Commonwealth Brands, Inc. v. United States of America). These provisions, that were under review were the most stringent ever passed into law by Congress. They include bans on color and graphics in ads, mandated warning text and images, and a ban on outdoor advertising and point-of-sale communications. The suit contends that the government goes too far in restricting speech directed at a legal audience in advancing its legitimate interest in reducing youth tobacco use, and is thus unconstitutionally restricting speech.

ANA joined in a “friend-of-the-court” brief with the 4As and AAF. We believe if allowed to stand, these restrictions would serve as a template for limiting many other controversial categories of advertising. Our brief argued that Congress overlooked a number of less restrictive alternatives that could have achieved the objectives of discouraging smoking and protecting minors without restricting speech – and that these alternatives would in fact be more effective. Our brief is available at <http://www.ana.net/advocacy/getfile/15431>.

In January, the District Court held that the ban on colors and images in ads was too broad and unconstitutional. However, the court upheld other speech restrictions, including those on sponsorships, outdoor advertising, and the language and graphics required in warning labels. Both sides in this case cross-appealed to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the Sixth Circuit. We have filed a further “friend-of-the-court” brief in this case, arguing that the lower court seriously erred in upholding most of the Act’s marketing restrictions. We contend that the District Court should have struck down all of the marketing restrictions as overly broad and unconstitutional. This brief can be read at <http://www.ana.net/getfile/15753>.

The case is awaiting a hearing by the Sixth Circuit.

R.J. Reynolds Tobacco Company et al v. FDA

Five tobacco companies have sought an injunction and summary judgment against the FDA’s promulgation of rules enacting the warning label provisions of the Family Smoking Prevention and Tobacco Control Act. In February 2012, the U.S. District Court for the District of Columbia granted the plaintiff’s motion for summary judgment, finding that the warning labels violated the First Amendment to the U.S. Constitution. U.S. District Court Judge Richard Leon wrote that “the Government...may not force others...to serve as its unwilling mouthpiece” and that the rule was insufficiently tailored to meet the government’s interest to warrant compelling speech in such a manner. The case is scheduled for oral argument in April at the U.S. Court of Appeals for the District of Columbia Circuit on the preliminary injunction issued against the warning labels in November.

Recently Decided and Other Important Cases

IMS Health cases

Vermont, New Hampshire and Maine passed similar legislation banning the use of physician histories for commercial purposes, including their use in marketing prescription drugs to doctors, which is known as “detailing.” New Hampshire, which passed its law first, claimed in response to a challenge to the law in federal court (IMS Health v. Ayotte) that the law did not regulate speech, and even if a court determined that it did, the state has an interest in promoting public health and protecting patient privacy. The U.S. District Court for the District of New Hampshire disagreed, finding the law violated the First Amendment under the U.S. Supreme Court’s Central Hudson test. New Hampshire appealed to the U.S. Court of Appeals for the First Circuit, which held in late 2008 that the law was constitutional as it regulated “conduct” and not “speech,” and thus the higher level of scrutiny given commercial speech restrictions under Central Hudson did not apply. Under the lowest level of constitutional scrutiny, known as rational basis, the state merely needed to show its actions were rationally related to a legitimate government interest, and the court would be required to uphold the law.

The U.S. Supreme Court declined to hear the case in 2009. ANA previously had filed a brief with the Supreme Court arguing that whole categories of speech would be found to be impermissible if judged under the lesser level of scrutiny used by the First Circuit in Ayotte and that defining speech activity as conduct severely undermines First Amendment values. Our brief can be viewed at <http://www.ana.net/advocacy/getfile/15130>. The First Circuit also upheld the challenge to the Maine law (IMS Health v. Mills) on similar grounds.

In the Vermont case (IMS Health v. Sorrell), the U.S. District Court for the District of Vermont held that the law violated the First Amendment. The U.S. Court of Appeals for the Second Circuit heard arguments on October 13, 2009, and upheld the lower court’s decision in November 2010, finding the law violated the Central Hudson test. Vermont appealed to the U.S. Supreme Court, which agreed to take the case in January 2011, most likely due to the split between the First and Second Circuits.

In a 6-3 decision on June 24, 2011, the U.S. Supreme Court agreed with the Second Circuit and found that the Vermont law violated the First Amendment (and effectively reversing the First Circuit). In doing so, it rejected the First Circuit’s finding that it regulated conduct and not speech, with Justice Anthony Kennedy writing that “the creation and dissemination of information are speech within the meaning of the First Amendment. . . Facts, after all, are the beginning point for much of the speech that is most essential to advance human knowledge and to conduct human affairs. There is thus a strong argument that prescriber-identifying information is speech for First Amendment purposes.” In doing so, the Court found that Vermont’s restrictions on speech were subject to “heightened scrutiny” but found it unnecessary to decide whether to apply the traditional test for regulating commercial speech. It said the result would be the same whether it conducted a commercial speech inquiry or applied a stricter form of judicial scrutiny. The state’s asserted purpose, in preventing doctors from receiving more effective pitches from marketers, did not justify a restriction on speech.

This case sets a strong, positive precedent for marketers that wish to target their message to consumers.

Schwarzenegger v. Entertainment Merchants Association et al

California passed a law in 2005 that prohibited the sale or rental of “violent video game[s]” to persons under 18 years of age. A “violent video game” is defined in the law as a game including killing, maiming, dismembering or sexually assaulting an image of a person, if depicted in a way that a reasonable person would find appeals to a morbid interest to minors, is offensive to prevailing community standards, or causes the game to lack serious literary, artistic, political or scientific value for minors. Parents and guardians were still permitted to rent or purchase games on a minor’s behalf. Suit was filed in the U.S. District Court for the Northern District of California alleging the law violated the First Amendment and seeking an injunction against enforcement.

The District Court found that the law did violate the First Amendment. The court held that while the government has a compelling interest in protecting minors, it did not prove that video games were any different from other media or that they led to violent behavior, which was the main justification propounded for the law. The U.S. Court of Appeals for the Ninth Circuit agreed, and California filed a petition for cert with the U.S. Supreme Court. The Supreme Court heard oral arguments in the case on November 2, 2010.

ANA joined a “friend-of-the-court” brief filed in conjunction with various publishers and recording groups to the Supreme Court. The brief argued that the Supreme Court has long refused to carve out a distinction under the First Amendment for violent materials and discussed the long history of textual and visual depictions of violence in art and literature. The brief, which can be viewed at <http://www.ana.net/getfile/15862>, contended that the justifications California made for the law are not sufficient to withstand Constitutional scrutiny.

On June 27, 2011, in one of the last decisions released in the 2010 term, the Court held 7-2 that the law violated the First Amendment. Justice Antonin Scalia, writing for the court, held that the state’s responsibility to protect children from harm “does not include a free-floating power to restrict the ideas to which children may be exposed. . . Even where the protection of children is the object, the constitutional limits on governmental action apply.” In his opinion, Justice Scalia discussed many of same examples from art and literature throughout history that our friend-of-the-court brief cited.

Educational Media Co. v. Swecker

The Fourth Circuit Court of Appeals recently reversed a lower court ruling in this case dealing with Virginia’s ban on alcohol beverage ads in college newspapers. The court, in a 2-1 decision, held that the law did not violate the First Amendment. Using the test articulated in the U.S. Supreme Court’s landmark Central Hudson case, the court held that the law materially advanced the government’s interest in decreasing demand for alcohol among college students and preventing underage drinking. It also found that the law was sufficiently narrow in that it was limited to certain types of ads for beer, wine and mixed beverages and applied only to student-run publications targeted at a readership under 21 years old.

The college newspapers asked the U.S. Supreme Court to hear the case. ANA, along with the 4A’s and AAF, submitted an amicus brief asking the court to grant cert. Our brief can be viewed at <http://www.ana.net/getfile/15868>. However, despite a split between this court and a decision issued by Judge (now Supreme Court Justice) Samuel Alito while on the Third Circuit Court of Appeals in 2004, which found a similar law in Pennsylvania violated the First Amendment, the U.S. Supreme Court declined to hear the case.

FCC v. Fox Television Stations

In 2004, the Federal Communications Commission changed its policies regarding so-called “fleeting expletives,” making any broadcast of an expletive, even inadvertent, a violation of its indecency rules. Up until this change, the FCC had followed the policy it adopted after the Supreme Court’s landmark Pacifica ruling (the famous “seven dirty words” case), and issued fines against broadcasters only for repeated indecency violations. The FCC then proceeded to levy substantial fines against broadcasters that had aired live events where such fleeting expletives were used. However, the Second Circuit Court of Appeals overturned these fines and raised questions about the FCC’s indecency actions as they relate to the First Amendment.

The Commission appealed to the U.S. Supreme Court, and in a fractured 5-4 decision, it reversed the Second Circuit. However, the case was decided on other grounds and did not reach the First Amendment issues raised by the FCC’s order. The Court instead remanded it back to the appeals court for consideration of those issues, which struck down the fleeting expletives policy again in July, finding them too vague to withstand First Amendment scrutiny. The FCC appealed to the full Second Circuit, which agreed with the panel decision in November 2010.

If the Supreme Court ultimately hears the First Amendment issues, the resulting opinion could have significant ramifications for content control generally. The Court may consider proposals to regulate other types of content, including potential advertising restrictions. Justice John Paul Stevens, in a dissenting opinion, specifically alluded to certain ads as raising potential indecency issues.

Justice Clarence Thomas, in a concurring opinion, questioned the continued constitutional viability of the Court’s holdings in both Red Lion and Pacifica in light of technological advances.

The Supreme Court is expected to hear the case again in its 2011 term.

Altria Group v. Good

At issue in this case was whether federal law relating to cigarette labeling preempts state law relating to claims that “light” cigarettes are less dangerous due to the lower tar and nicotine levels. A class action lawsuit was filed in Maine federal court under Maine Unfair Trade Practice law alleging that Philip Morris had falsely represented light cigarettes as safer than regular cigarettes. They alleged that the health benefits were offset by smoking more. The federal district court dismissed the suit on preemption grounds, but the First Circuit Court of Appeals in Boston reinstated it, claiming that Philip Morris’s duty not to deceive consumers was covered by state law, whereas the federal law covered health claims.

A divided Supreme Court affirmed the First Circuit’s decision in December, holding that the suit alleging the deception as to the safety of “light” cigarettes could go forward under Maine consumer protection law. Justice John Paul Stevens, writing for the court, held that federal preemption is to be narrowly construed and that the federal labeling act did not preempt their claims of fraud and deception. A strenuous dissent by Justice Clarence Thomas, joined by the Chief Justice and Justices Scalia and Alito, contended that the alleged false and deceptive statements were directly related to the health risk of smoking and thus the suit was preempted by federal law.

The Court’s opinion can be viewed at <http://www.supremecourtus.gov/opinions/08pdf/07-562.pdf>.
