B2B marketing has a reputation for being traditional and slow to embrace change, especially when compared to its often more fashionable counterpart, consumer marketing.

Visit ana.net and follow us at @ana_marketing1 to learn more about how brands can prepare for the future of B2B marketing. Check out the full research report and also visit ANA’s Marketing Futures Hub for other cutting-edge marketing topics that are changing the world of marketing forever.

B2B organizations prepared to adapt to this new dynamic are more likely to rise above the competition. Consider these four trends to prepare for the future of B2B marketing:

THE FUTURE OF

There's a new B2B customer journey. Customer expectations are changing. In past decades, the B2B customer journey was linear, but new customer journeys are 'looping.' Customers or buying committees cycle back and forth between journey stages often conducting independent research on brands and their services before ever connecting with a salesperson. “What is looping? It is simply an acknowledgment to the reality that customers don't move in a purchase along a straight line. Truth to be sure, there's a beginning and an end, but the way they get from that beginning to that end is almost anything but a straight line.”

Business marketers can no longer meet customer expectations by casting a wide generic net into the marketplace. Today, successful B2B marketing requires collaboration with sales and a well-crafted martech stack that can deliver on the customer's demand for convenience, personalization, and ease of doing business. “As the lines between B2B and B2C marketing continue to blur, the majority of business buyers now expect brands to anticipate their needs and deliver personalized experiences on par with what they've received as consumers.”

Account-Based Marketing is on the rise. Enhance your Content Marketing with AI. This approach, also known as ABM, targets a select number of highly-qualified leads with specific, personalized messaging and tactics. In a B2B landscape in which customers demand tailored experiences, account-based marketing offers an ideal solution. “Account based marketing is simply instead of fishing with nets, we're fishing with spears. You identify exactly the prospects you want to do business with and then you market very precisely and narrowly to them directly.”

By harnessing artificial intelligence, B2B marketers can glean meaningful insights from large datasets to inform their content strategies. Those who leverage this ability can shield their content from getting lost in the digital clutter. “There is more content being produced than ever before by marketers, so the need for true quality is an imperative.”